THOUGHT IT WAS HEALTHFUL

To go out Driving, Secured the Rigs by False Pretences.

A young man who has of late made the practice of obtaining goods and various articles of value under false pretences was arrested on Pike street yesterday morning.

It seems that Emerson C. Ritchie has a fondness for buggy riding and to gratify this taste he secured livery rigs of the Marietta Transfer Co., giving in exchange the commission of the Henderson Oil Co. In whose employ he claimed to be. The account in all amounts to $24.50. Ritchie admits the fraud, but wishes to settle the matter without the Mayor's assistance or intervention.

Another one of his escapades brought him before the city police, he purchased a set of harness valued at $25 from F. H. Elbing and had the account put on the books. He then went to Schlumberger's second hand store, where he left the harness, having received $15 for the set. He extricated himself from this difficulty by paying the required amount.

If you expect to visit the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo you can save time and trouble by securing your hotel accommodations in advance at Statler's Pan-American Hotel, the best and most convenient place to stop. First class accommodations for 5000 people one block from the main entrance to Exposition grounds. Secure your hotel accommodations now. For information regarding rates, etc., call on or address J. R. Walters, clerk, hotel Norwood. He will also engage quarters for you and give you contract at rates agreed upon.

A Sign of the Times.

When you see two men retire to a dark doorway, take off their coats and roll up their sleeves, don't imagine that there is going to be a fight and that the entire police and fire departments are needed to quiet an incipient disturbance. Indeed, there is no cause for alarm, as the men are only comparing vaccination marks and expiating on the merits of the different kinds of virus which the various physicians use.

DISAPPOINTED

Were two Youthful Lovers in their Matrimonial Ambitions.

Chillicothe in some way seems to have acquired the reputation of being the Gretna Green of Ohio, for in the last few months a number of runaway couples have stopped in the city and made an effort to secure marriage licenses.

On Tuesday afternoon a young man, or perhaps it would be more truthful to call him a boy, and a girl still in short dresses, climbed to the third story of the Foutke block, and going to the county clerk's office, asked Deputy J. C. Staggs for a marriage certificate. A look of sadness stole over their childlike countenances when informed that papers of such a character could not be obtained there, but were again made happy when directed to the Probate Judge's office, and merrily tripped down stairs, soon reaching the office.

There they asked for a license and the papers were all made out except that portion which calls for ages. The girl claimed to be 19 and the boy gave his age at 20 years. To get married at this age it was necessary to have his father's consent, but as he did not carry such a thing with him, the couple were compelled to leave without the permit.

They gave their names as William Reger and Lilly Smith and said their parents lived in Weston, West Virginia, but if able to obtain a license in this city they were perfectly willing to forsake their paternal ancestors and reside here. It is presumed they will seek a city where the license laws are not so strict.—Chillicothe Gazette.

PEOPLE OF AUSTRALIA.

Their Environment has Made them Broad-Minded.

"Strong from the outdoor life they lead and from contention with the difficult conditions that have confronted them, the Australians as a people have become tall and straight like their gum trees, broad-shouldered, deep-chested and wiry. They are clear of eyes and skin, of remarkable soundness and whiteness in their teeth of luxuriant, fine-textured hair. Bertillon says: 'When you see these characteristics generally marked you may know you are in the presence of a great people.'"

"Magnificent distances stand before them wherever they travel within their own country, and the long travel develops endurance and calm power against adversities, as well as the gift to laugh at the smaller difficulties and embarrassments of every-day life. The £40,000,000 worth of products which the country exports annually to England comes chiefly from the vast interior, and there are hundreds and hundreds of men dwell in stations separated by days of journeying.

"There, in lonely isolation among millions of gum trees, they tend flocks of sheep numbering upwards to 200,000 per flock. There among the far-stretching hills and mountains they round up ranges bearing 15,000 to 30,000 head of cattle. And the life that these men lead leaves its impress upon the nation.

"Men who dwell in the interior of Australia are ever in the presence of valleys, plains and gorges stretching in all directions, with mountains pushing upon mountains till, in the hazy distance, they are lost in the sky-line—no man's land, desolate, unattended; theirs if they want it, only most of them already have more than they know what to do with. The immensity, the colossal expansion presided over by an almost awe-inspiring stillness, become either maddening or sublime, according to the temperament. Curiously enough, it is usually the sublimity that prevails.

"Another effect, and one that plays equally strong in shaping the qualities of the nation, has arisen from contact with the wilderness. The Australians that lived in great solitudes could not afford to be exclusive. They felt out for a hand. Their hospitality was eager. The bush was open house. Thus his environment forced away inherited exclusiveness and the Australian became a different man from the British—broader, franker and more unselfish. He has outgrown repression and the sense of superiority. He has had enough experience to give him a wholesome sense of humor. He has worked hard enough to appreciate relaxation. He has borne into the new land the liking of his home country for a sport, but he has followed it on a broader scale. He has horse races, as in England; but he has kangaroo hunts, which make the hare hunting of England seem like schoolboy's play.

"Life to the Australian is as his continent. There have been times when both life and the continent were hard to hold, but the probation period is passed. Australia for Australians has become an unchanging impulse of all the people. The inhabitants have come to realize that the power to grow, to spread their influence beyond the country's borders—in other words, to assume nationality—is now theirs.

"Aspirations above mere money-making have been generated. Australians feel the desire to rub against the people of other countries, and to test the gifts and acquisitions of their long struggle in the redemption of the continent. In other words, political ambition has arisen. The federation is the means chosen to realize that ambition.

"The people of Australia love the home government and presumably never will separate from it; but they have become sufficiently important to possess the anatomy and the practical participation in governing which belong to a state that is an integral part of any central government. Prior to the federation, their governors were appointed in Downing street. Their legislators had no personal voice in Parliament. They themselves had no equality or intercourse with the great political centers of the world. All these developing responsibilities were cut off from them—responsibilities which, above all other things, are needed to awaken into action the highest intellect and the strongest judgment of a people. The Australians aspired to become a factor in the decision of world problems."—G. Sheridan Dowell in Ainslie's.

The Bullet's Lodging Place.

Over two months ago Frank Curtis was shot in the mouth by a Swede as the result of a fracas in which the men became engaged at Charles Henderson's place.

At the time it was considered dangerous by the attending physicians to probe the wound for the pistol ball. Later when an attempt was made the piece of lead could not be located. Curtis averred that the bullet had dropped into his mouth after penetrating his jaw and tongue and that he had swallowed the battered missile.

An examination of the colored man's mouth soon convinced the surgeon who made the examination that the bullet was still lodged in the mouth.

The surgeon's knife soon located the battered piece of lead in the floor of Curtis' mouth. The bullet had passed through lip, jaw and tongue and finally embedded itself in the base of the mouth cavity.

By its course through bone and sinew the bullet had been divided into two parts.

The Waugh Family.

In Ohio Township, Gallia county, the fact has just come to light here that Theodore Waugh, Republican, elected justice of the peace of that township last spring by a majority of 2, while his brother, C. L. Waugh, was elected justice of the peace of that same office by about 40, there being two justices elected in Ohio township last spring.

There are two other brothers in the family, and one of these, John Waugh, is Trustee of Ald township, Lawrence school director in Clay township, Gallia county. What is most remarkable of all is that none of them sought the office they hold.—Ironton Republican.
